

CRC Nature Walk at Okehocking Preserve Features Talk on Photography Wine and Cheese

About 20 CRC members and community members gathered November 9 for a photography nature walk, organized by the CRC Education and Outreach Committee. Photographer Andy Shelter talked about "the golden hour" in photography - that time of day when the sun is setting (or rising) when the quality of light is rich and the shadows create interest. Participants hiked around Willistown Township's Okehocking Preserve for about 90 minutes, taking photos and asking questions as they walked.

“Andy stressed the importance of choosing the best photos (from those we've already taken) as much as taking the best photos in the first place,” said CRC Board and Education and Outreach Member Beth Murray. After the hike, wine and cheese was served at the CRC office. “Most people stuck around and got to know one another,” said Beth. “It was a good opportunity for folks to learn about CRC and the work we do.”
